

The University of North Carolina Department of Emergency Medicine Scholarship for Under-Represented Minority Providers in Emergency Medicine

Introduction

The University of North Carolina Department of Emergency Medicine in conjunction with the UNC School of Medicine endeavors to promote and sustain a training environment that embraces diversity of race, gender, ethnicity, and geographic origin. Emergency Medicine as a specialty serves all people and we support a work force in emergency medicine that reflects the diversity of our patient population.

Definition

We use as our starting point the AAMC definition of underrepresented communities: “those racial and ethnic populations that are underrepresented in the medical population.” We also include persons in the LGBTQ community and persons who have shown commitment to serving in underserved communities.

Program Description

Scholarship recipients will complete a 4-week Acting Internship in Emergency Medicine with us. The Acting Internship will include clinical shifts at the UNC and WakeMed in Raleigh Emergency Departments, Emergency Medicine hands-on and didactic resident lecture series, and opportunities to meet with leadership in the Emergency Medicine residency at UNC. The goal is to provide a robust EM experience and an opportunity to explore Emergency Medicine residency at UNC for fourth year students interested in a career in Emergency Medicine.

The scholarships are awarded on a rolling basis and applicants will be notified of final decisions when the selection process is complete. Four scholarships are offered in total each year from August through November. Scholarships will be awarded starting in April of each year. The award is $1500 to be used to offset travel, lodging, food, and other educational expenses related to the acting internship.
